Re: United States v. Matthew Goettsche, et al., 19-cr-877-CCC (D.N.J.)
Defendant Jobadiah Sinclair Weeks' Proposed Scheduling Order

Your Honor:

The parties have conferred on several occasions with the aim of reaching agreement on a proposed scheduling order for the above-referenced case. After multiple discussions, and good faith efforts by all sides, the parties are unable to reach an agreement on this matter. Each party has its reasons for taking its respective position and, without question, believes those reasons to be well-founded and reasonable. Mr. Weeks has attached his proposed scheduling order for this Court's consideration, but would respectfully recommend a hearing to resolve the parties' issues with their proposed, competing scheduling orders.

The government has drafted a scheduling order anticipating reciprocal discovery to conclude in September 2020. The government's proposed scheduling order also recommends that the Court convene its first status conference in October 2020. For a defendant like Mr. Weeks, who has been detained since December 10, 2019, waiting 10 months in pretrial detention before the first status conference is an excessive amount of time.

After having a dialogue with the government, Mr. Weeks recognizes that the parties will not, at least initially, be able to reach consensus on the scheduling order. As opposed to proposing a scheduling order that lays out a discovery plan through the end of the anticipated discovery period, Mr. Weeks recommends an incremental approach. Mr. Weeks recommends that the government produce an initial batch of discovery, initiate the filter review process, hold a hearing to assess the status of discovery, and then devise a schedule to continue through the end of the discovery period, or implement the next incremental step in discovery. Without receiving any discovery, Mr. Weeks is not comfortable agreeing to a continuance, and the waiver of speedy trial, for nine or ten months. In reality, having the first status conference in October likely means a second status conference at the end of 2020 or the beginning of 2021. The likely outcome of the government's proposed scheduling order is a trial in the spring of 2021. This means Mr. Weeks will be detained for at least 16 months before trial. Under the circumstances, a more incremental approach would be preferable over a process that could lead to the revelation of discovery issues for the first time at a status conference in October. And, respectfully, defendant Joseph Abel's agreement to a continuance through the end of November should not dictate the same result for the remaining defendants.

For the reasons stated above, a measured approach is the best approach. Mr. Weeks recommends the attached proposed scheduling order to the Court and requests a hearing on this matter.

Sincerely,

Simon Gaugush
