On Tuesday, administrators at the Essex County Correctional Facility (ECCF) were notified that a superior officer has tested positive for COVID-19. That staff member has not been at the facility since March 16, officials said.

Essex County officials said there have been several precautions taken at the prison regarding the coronavirus (see the list below).

No inmates or detainees at the ECCF have tested positive for the virus as of Wednesday afternoon. However, on Sunday, Essex County administrators were notified by the GEO Group that an inmate at Delaney Hall – a separate facility in Newark – has tested positive for COVID-19.

The inmate, who is exhibiting symptoms of the virus, has been isolated from the general population at Delaney Hall. He's "responding well" to medical treatment, officials said.

The seven other inmates who were housed in the same dorm have been quarantined at Delaney Hall. None are exhibiting symptoms of COVID-19 as of Sunday evening, officials said.

‘EVERY DAY I AM FEARFUL’

On Wednesday, more than 1,000 people demanded the release of immigrants held in ICE custody at New Jersey’s county jails in a petition sent to Bergen, Essex and Hudson officials, as well as the ICE field office in Newark.

As the numbers of positive COVID-19 cases in New Jersey grow, there are now multiple confirmed cases of coronavirus at the county jails in Bergen, Hudson and Essex, including an ICE detainee at Bergen County Jail.

Over the past week, immigrant detainees at each prison have gone on hunger strikes to demand their release.

“I have a loved one currently in ICE custody at the Essex County Jail and every day I am fearful that he will test positive for COVID-19 and not have the proper medical attention,” said Laura, a member of advocacy group Make the Road New Jersey.

“I’m very worried about his health and his safety if he gets sick,” she continued. “I don't think he will get adequate medical care. For all of our safety in New Jersey, we must release detainees to be home with their loved ones.”
